

The humanitarian crisis in South Sudan shows no sign of abating. The rainy season is in progress, and logistics and sanitation challenges have increased. Cholera cases and warnings are on the rise. Since the crisis began six months ago, close to 1.5 million people have fled their homes, and sporadic conflict continued. The Crisis Response Plan for 2014 calls for US $1.8 billion to assist 3.8 million people by the end of this year.
